

Splitrock Storage — Local SEO & Website Plan

Prepared by Scott Swenson · The Storage Owner's SEO Guy · storageownerseoguy.com · September 2026

First, what you're doing right

Most facilities I audit are a mess. Yours isn't. You have a 5.0-star Google rating with 50 reviews — one of the best I've seen anywhere. Your website ranks #1 when people search your name, it publishes real prices with live availability (almost nobody does that), and you even have a listing on the City of Finlayson's own website. The foundation is strong. The plan below is about fixing the leaks and expanding your reach — not starting over.

What's quietly costing you rentals (found in my audit, Sept 2026)

- Your Google listing has no business hours and needs its ownership locked down. It also sits in a slightly wrong category. For a 5-star profile, these are easy wins being left on the table.
- Two different phone numbers are circulating. Your official number is (320) 372-2534, but some Facebook posts advertise a different cell number. Google rewards businesses whose info matches everywhere — one public number, always.
- Your website is missing its "roadmap files" for Google (robots.txt and a sitemap don't exist), has none of the behind-the-scenes code that feeds Google your prices and hours, and the FAQ section shows questions with no answers.
- Your website disagrees with your rental portal. The site says 20' containers are waitlisted — your CC Storage portal says they're available to rent right now. And your delivered portable containers (available!) aren't shown on the website at all. You're turning away customers for products you can rent today.
- Duplicate and stale listings: MapQuest lists you twice under two names, and a commercial real-estate site still shows the property for sale — which makes the business look like it's closing.
- You're invisible in Hinckley. Search "storage units hinckley mn" and you're nowhere — 15 minutes from your gate, and the facilities that do show up are all beatable.

The plan — four phases, roughly 30 days

Phase 1 Week 1	Website foundations	Add the missing Google roadmap files (robots + sitemap), the structured data that feeds Google
Phase 2 Weeks 1–2	Google Business Profile	Lock down ownership, set hours (24/7 gate access shown correctly), correct the category, add
Phase 3 Weeks 2–3	Pages that win new customers	Add a Hinckley storage page (your biggest nearby market), a beefed-up shipping-container page
Phase 4 Weeks 3–4	Listings cleanup	Merge the duplicate MapQuest listings, get the for-sale listing removed, create your Bing Place

After that: a 30/60/90-day report with before-and-after screenshots — what was broken, what I did, and what moved.

What I'll need from you

- Access to (or claiming of) your Google Business Profile — I'll walk you through it, about 10 minutes
- Who built splitrockstorage.com, and access to the account it lives in (plus GoDaddy for the domain if needed)
- Container pricing for the website (sale price, rental, delivery area) — "call for quote" is losing you sales
- Your true hours: gate access vs. office, so every listing tells the same story
- Agreement that (320) 372-2534 is the only number we publish anywhere
- Exact unit measurements (door width/height, interior size) and 10–20 phone photos of the facility

What you own when we're done

Everything. The website and domain stay in your accounts, every listing is registered to you, and your CC Storage rental system stays exactly as it is — I build around it, not over it. No monthly bills to me, no contracts, nothing held hostage. Your only recurring cost is the ~$12/year domain you already pay.

The deal

Free. All of it. In exchange I ask for two things: your honest feedback on the process, and permission to share the before-and-after results. I own seven storage facilities in Minnesota and Wisconsin — I fixed all of mine, and now I'm proving it works on facilities that aren't mine. Yours is one of two I'm taking on.
